

FACING HISTORY AND OURSELVES SEMINAR

This Fall, Facing History and Ourselves will once again offer our 8-week facilitated online seminar, "Holocaust and Human Behavior." By using the Holocaust as a case study, we raise profound moral questions about the consequences of our actions and our beliefs, and we help our students make connections between history and the moral choices they make every day. While the Holocaust was a unique event in human history, the questions remain universal.

Seminar Dates:

October 16, 2008 December 17, 2008.

Information and application: <http://www.facinghistory.org/OnlineSeminar>

Renew your commitment to growing and learning; bring content, methodology, and a powerful approach to examining the Holocaust into your classroom that will engage and transform your students; enjoy the flexible professional development opportunity of online learning; earn optional graduate credits from Lesley University, Cambridge, MA.; participate in a powerful conference call with a survivor of the Holocaust.

Take "Facing History and Ourselves" online seminar, "Holocaust and Human Behavior," and gain full access to our in-depth professional development services, curricular resources, and ongoing support to educators in the areas of history, social studies, and English language arts.

Learn key strategies, such as how to:

- *Create a safe environment in your classroom based on trust and respect for different views and opinions;
- *Facilitate discussions around controversial topics;
- *Take an interdisciplinary approach to teaching this difficult history.

Bring a friend, and you both receive a $50 discount.

Information and application: <http://www.facinghistory.org/OnlineSeminar>.

Questions? Please contact Tanya Lubicz-Nawrocka at tanya_lubicz-nawrocka@facing.org